STATE COLLEGE

Continuing Education connects with people at all stages of life's learning timeline.

The Office of Continuing Education and Extended Studies

The Office of Continuing Education and Extended Studies at Keene State College reaches out to serve non-traditional students. That's great! But what exactly does that mean? It means they pride themselves on developing creative, interesting, and valuable programs for many populations throughout our community.

Let's take it in order of life's learning timeline...

For children:

For more than a decade, Continuing Education has offered a summer learning camp for children in grades 1-8 called Kids on Campus. During this four-week program, children can engage in activities that run the gamut from art and music to robotics and geocaching, cooking, language, and so much more. Kids on Campus has been so popular that they will offer school vacation camps in February and April 2017.

This is exciting for the campers and very helpful for working parents.

Continuing Education recently took over stewardship of the Young Entrepreneurs Academy (YEA!). YEA! is a cutting-edge program that takes students ages 11-18 through the process of starting a real business. By the end, students will own and operate fully-formed and functioning businesses, which is great for our local economy and for the future of these young entrepreneurs. (If you're interested in becoming a YEA! volunteer, please contact director Allison Barrows.)

For adult learners:

The Office of Continuing Education should be the first stop on campus for adults who want to begin a degree or finish one already started. The goal of the entire staff in the Continuing Education office is to support people on their way to a degree. They understand that adult learners are busy, so the programs are flexible to accommodate schedules.

Get the attention you deserve!

For professionals:

Continuing Education can also assist local business owners and area employers by creating customized training programs that meet the specific needs of a targeted workforce. This includes work in the manufacturing sector, as well as professional development for educators in the southwest region of our state.

For retirees:

Studies show that learning new things and staying engaged socially are important to good health and well-being in our golden years. That's just part of why Continuing Education is so proud to offer a robust program for seniors called CALL, or the Cheshire Academy for Lifelong Learning. CALL sessions run three times a year, with the next session running from January 27-February 17.

For online learners:

Online learning is for everyone! Did you know that Continuing Education offers hundreds of online, non-credit courses? They begin monthly and most six-week courses cost just $124. They also offer certificate programs that may be helpful in propelling your professional growth.

So, when they say they serve non-traditional students, the people in the Office of Continuing Education at Keene

State mean they reach out to meet the needs of our local employers, our neighbors, and our community. They offer many programs to many people. Take a look. If you don't see something you want, just ask. Who knows what might develop?

For more information, call 603-358-2290 or stop by their office for a visit. They're located on the first floor of the Elliot Center and open Monday - Thursday 8:00-6:00pm and Friday 8:00am-5:00pm.

New Overtime Rule Put on Hold

by Benjamin J. Wyatt, Esq.

*Benjamin J. Wyatt, Esq.
Employment Lawyer –
Law Offices of Wyatt

What Employers Need to Know

On November 22, 2016, a federal judge in Texas issued a nation-wide preliminary injunction delaying the implementation of the Department of Labor's new overtime regulation, which had been scheduled to take effect on December 1, 2016. The now-delayed rule made most employees earning less than $913 per week ($47,476 annually) eligible for overtime pay whenever they worked more than 40 hours per week.

The newly issued preliminary injunction is a purely temporary measure maintaining the status quo until the judge can issue a permanent ruling on whether the Department of Labor overstepped its authority in issuing the overtime regulation. Furthermore, it is likely that the DOL will swiftly appeal this preliminary injunction. The preliminary injunction not only delays the December 1, 2016 implementation date, but also calls into question whether the overtime rule will ever take effect in its current form. To the extent that the issue has not been resolved by the time Donald Trump takes office on January 20, 2016, then there is a possibility that the new presidential administration will refuse to defend the regulation in court or will otherwise negotiate with Congress to formulate a compromise.

Employers trying to navigate through this uncertain situation should take the following factors into consideration:

Employers that have already announced or implemented pay changes for their employees will need to carefully consider the potential impact on morale before deciding whether to reverse or delay implementing pre-announced changes. Any changes to pay or pay plans should be announced in writing to employees before taking effect, even in situations where an employer merely intends to “put on hold” a previously announced pay change that had not yet taken effect.

Employers that have not yet announced pay changes can more easily take a “wait and see” approach, but need to keep in mind that the new overtime regulation could come swiftly into force if the preliminary injunction is reversed or lifted in the future. Accordingly, employers can maximize their protections by having the plans and paperwork in place to “hit the ground running” if the regulation is allowed to take effect down the road.

This preliminary injunction has no effect on the existing “job duties” exemption tests that most salaried employees must pass under existing law in order to be exempt from obligatory overtime pay requirements. Accordingly, employers are well advised to continue the process of analyzing their salaried positions to ensure that they pass one of the exemption tests. Employers can often bolster their position that a job passes one of the “job duty” exemption tests by properly structuring job duties, job descriptions, organizational charts, and other employment-related documentation to support the exempt status of salaried employees. Conversely, employers that fear certain positions may not meet the applicable duties tests may still want to proceed with implementing alternative pay methods for these roles, including fluctuating workweek pay systems.

Unfortunately, it appears likely that employers will face continued uncertainty concerning pay rules for several weeks or months. Accordingly, employers are well-advised to ensure that they are compliant with already existing overtime rules and are likewise prepared to act quickly once there is more clarity concerning the fate of the Department of Labor's new overtime regulation.

Ben Wyatt is Managing Partner of the Law Offices of Wyatt & Associates, P.L.L.C., a Keene law firm focused on labor & employment law. Ben assists employers and employees throughout New England in navigating employment law challenges and opportunities, including ensuring compliance with federal and state wage and hour compensation rules.

Franchising 101 — Much More Than Fast Food & French Fries

Friday, January 13th, 2017 Noon-1 PM
GKCC Conference Room

*Isn't franchising
just fast food?
Absolutely not!*

The franchise industry encompasses thousands of business concepts including:

- Absentee owner, semi-absentee owner & owner-operated models
- Single, multi-unit, master & regional development opportunities
- Home-based, “brick and mortar”, portable and mobile options
- Investment levels from $15,000 to $1,000,000+

Join Nancy Brooks of The Entrepreneur's Source for our January Brown Bag Lunch to understand the myths, realities and possibilities of franchise ownership. Topics to be covered include:

- Franchising as an alternative or “encore” career
- Franchising to expand and compliment an existing business
- Being in business for yourself, but not by yourself
- Franchising as a catalyst for regional economic development

The franchising industry accounts for $404.6 billion of the U.S. gross domestic product and $1.6 billion in New Hampshire. NH franchise businesses currently employ 26,900 individuals with an annual payroll of $1 billion. Growth projections for franchising remain strong – give this alternative business model a closer look!
